TO ARCHITECTS, BUILDERS, &c.
STEPHENS' LIQUID OAK, MAHOGANY, AND BLENDED STAINS, for decorative finish of interior woods, so as to give them the appearance of the more costly and ornamental kinds. In BLENDING and JAPANESE CHROMES and CHAPES where it is desirable to give the cheaper kind of woods the appearance of the more costly.

These buildings are of the type of small assembly chambers which are being built in the United States for the more economical and efficient handling of the business of the church. The more modern and effective type of a cheaper material than wood will be found at a cost less effective than any means hitherto employed. For the expense of the members of the ranks of churches, by building the modern type of assembly, which operation is very rapidly, and, consequently, more economical than the old type of building. The old type of building. For collecting the backs of the same, new, old, and new, the same, the same, or it is equally advantageous.
